1. The sale of valuable correspondence between HITLER and high government officials in London, Moscow, Rome, Paris, etc., plus the autographic original of ~~Winn~~ ~~Winn~~, and other historically valuable papers, is reported to be under consideration by Subject, who is now living in Lugano and who is in dire need of money. He is stated to have begun negotiations with an American Press Agency (~~Winn~~?, phonetic), whose Paris representative, one GALLI or GALLI (phonetic), is reported to have offered DOZMAN approximately two million lire as an advance of expenses for the collection of the documents.

(Italy) (Lugano)

2. DOZMAN is alleged to be in a position to obtain these and other valuable documents. Some are in his possession and others are scattered in the possession of several former high ranking Nazi officials. Subject has already visited ~~General~~ ~~General~~ ~~General~~, allegedly, during one of the short leaves which ~~General~~ ~~General~~ is granted from prison when the Americans are on guard duty. DOZMAN is reported to have told ~~General~~ ~~General~~ that he wished to collect the documents since they were being sought by "the Americans" and is stated to have received ~~General~~ ~~General~~'s approval and help in gathering the papers.

3. Considering, however, that the American Government might have an interest in the documents, DOZMAN feels that before concluding the negotiations with the above-mentioned Press Agency, the AIS should be informed. He therefore dispatched his errand boy, (Carlo) ~~General~~ ~~General~~ whom he knows to be in contact with the Italian services to ~~General~~ ~~General~~ approach, through the Italians, to an AIS representative in Italy.

4. [ ] and [ ] called on [ ] recited the story, and advocated taking the matter up directly with DOZMAN. [ ] agreed to forward the story to his superiors asking for instructions. Since a urgent reply was requested [ ] and [ ] had called on Milan [ ] on 21 August and telephoned on 23 August). [ ] suggested that [ ] request its Headquarters to contact [ ] on the matter. [ ] indicated that he personally was doubtful that the AIS would be interested in papers of historical value and that, furthermore, he doubted of the authenticity of the story as reported by ~~General~~ ~~General~~.

□ □ DISSENT:

5. The name of ROCCHI came out only after an hour-long discussion on the merits of the story. □ and to some extent □ expected to be completely sold on the importance of procuring the documents immediately and at all costs. They appeared at no time to doubt the extensiveness of the papers or their availability through DOLLMAN. There arose no question of the reliability of their informant until the time when □ could no longer keep his anonymous. After the name was mentioned, ROCCHI was described by the □ as a small time operator who has been acting as an errand boy in Italy for both DOLLMAN and □ and also as a police spy. □ informed □ objected that the route taken by DOLLMAN to reach AIS in Italy was rather tortuous and pointed out that a man of his caliber and position, although a former enemy official, should be able to find a more direct approach than through ROCCHI. The □ could offer no answer to this objection. They did state that DOLLMAN had broken off relations with □ having ascertained that the latter works for the Russian Legation in Rome. (ROCCHI reported times and places of a meeting or two that □ had with two Russian officers and with RUSA). Furthermore DOLLMAN does not want □ to get wind of the sale of these documents, and has decided that this was the best approach.

6. In the course of this conversation □ and □ also gave their account of the background of the DOLLMAN articles which had appeared in Oggi (and which occasioned the conversation Vico-Questore RUMMO had with □ - see PTMA-1010). As originally drafted, the articles contained an account of an episode of pederasty involving the then Prince Humbert of Savoy and his brother-in-law, the Duke of Aosta, in Naples. It seems that a boy involved in this affair threatened a scandal and the Duke of Aosta sacrificed himself, being a German citizen, to cover Humbert. The then-Chief of Police, MARINI, was informed of the incident and discussed it with DOLLMAN. A police report on the incident is stated to have been entered in a dossier which DOLLMAN was shown by SEMER.

7. DOLLMAN included this episode (and perhaps others) in his articles and then despatched ROCCHI to Milan to show the articles to Pippo FRASCATI, a Menarolist, and another DOLLMAN man. These two immediately caught the black-mail attempt, drove ROCCHI out of the house and, on the way to the Carabinieri, gave him a very rough going over. Then they went to Captain MARANO of the Carabinieri to turn ROCCHI in. MARANO pointed out to them that the backing of ROCCHI amounted to aggression for which FRASCATI and ROCCHI could be prosecuted. The two again drove off with ROCCHI. (Eventually, through □ negotiations with Menarolists in Switzerland, a sum reported to be lire 1,200,000, was turned over to the DOLLMAN group. The abridged articles were then sold, still through ROCCHI, to Oggi. ROCCHI, however, did not miss his chance to sue FRASSATI and ROCHIGO for assault. The trial is scheduled for September or October, 1951.
